It was written and directed by Michael Stephenson and stars James Caan, Marley Shelton, Liam Cunningham, Vincent D'Onofrio, Jason Flemyng, and John Savage. The pic will launch in international territories beginning on April 28. Related Story 'The Autopsy of Jane Doe' Scores Release Date From Screen Gems "We've been waiting forever for this movie to be made," said MGM co-chairman Jim Orr. "These are difficult subjects, and Michael Stephenson did a brilliant job exploring the real life psychology of all those involved in the case. We think this is a movie that will resonate across the world, and we can't wait for audiences to see it." Stephenson, known for his atmospheric thriller The Forest, which also stars Marley Shelton, began this take on the Jane Doe case by searching into the impact on the crew and actors involved. In doing so, he discovers that there was something much more sinister at work than has been publicly disclosed.

Bimodality of cupric distribution in J774 mouse macrophages as monitored by electron paramagnetic resonance. Extracts of amoebae protect mice against the lethal effects of a pathogenic lipopolisaccharide (LPS) when given 48 h before LPS administration. By electron paramagnetic resonance (EPR) spectroscopy, it was shown previously that administering copper lactate or diethylenetriaminepentaacetic acid to LPS-protected mice before LPS treatment prolonged their survival time while simultaneous administration of both copper chelator and LPS at the same time did not protect mice from LPS-induced lethality. These results suggested that the amount of copper available to LPS-primed cells might be a limiting factor in the toxicity of LPS. To determine the distribution of intracellular copper in J774 macrophages, cells were fixed and resin-embedded for EPR analysis. The EPR spectral patterns of cells from either killed or heat-killed J774 macrophages resembled those seen in LPS- and phosphate-buffered saline (PBS) controls. Both the killed 6d1f23a050
